

Security of Large Events

A wrap-up of expert webinars

Best practices & lessons from major events

Public transport is central to the success of large events, as they provide the only realistic means of moving mass volumes of people safely, efficiently, and sustainably before, during, and after events.

The security of big events is inseparable from the security of public transport. And no city faces this challenge in isolation. While each event is shaped by local context, governance structure, and threat profile, many security challenges are shared. Learning from previous events, both successes and failures, is key.

UITP brought together experienced public transport authorities, operators, and partners, for an open discussion on what is vital for the security of large events. In short, to help cities strengthen their preparedness through shared experience rather than isolated approaches.

- Case studies from around the world
- Q&As with global experts in the field
- Insights on security topics from technology to training

→ A crowd prepares to board a tram during a football match in Lyon, France.